- Networked with associates and partners at a drinks reception

July 2012 Two-week work-shadowing placement at high street firm, Porters, Nottingham

- Invited to take minutes at client meetings and conferences with barristers
- Researched legal precedents for two family law cases
- Observed the importance of meeting the business objectives of a chain of vet surgeries focused on buying another local practice

June 2011 Experienced two days of open court sessions, Norfolk County Court

- Observed the teamwork between barristers and solicitors in a range of criminal cases

Commercial work experience

September 2012–present Part-time customer services assistant, Sainsbury's, Solihull

- Promoted from cashier role after four months after demonstrating good rapport with customers

It's a good idea to use your name as the main heading using a bigger font size, such as 16 pt, so it stands out.

The main text should not be smaller than 11 pt. This example is in Times New Roman. Remember your reader: be professional and stay away from novelty fonts or gimmicks.

Graduate recruiters from both Linklaters LLP and Freshfields Bruckhaus Deringer agree that at this stage in your career it's a good idea to put your education and academic results first. Use percentages to make your grades stand out, but order them carefully. If you end your list with your lowest grade, the reader may remember the 63% rather than the 72%.

You don't need to list all your GCSEs.

Sharon Jacobs, graduate recruiter at Linklaters LLP, advises putting awards or scholarships under a separate heading.

Use subheads and bullet points to make your CV easier to read. Sharon suggests no more than two or three bullet points to explain what you got out of each experience and how you made an impact. Use strong, active verbs and don't go over two pages. 'Make sure it's not too prose heavy,' suggests Anup Vithlani at Trowers & Hamlin.

This section is your opportunity to illustrate your motivation for a career in law, with a particular type of firm. But don't go overboard about the skills you developed on your placement; you're more likely to have developed soft skills in extracurricular activities, part-time work and in positions of responsibility.

Don't be downhearted by a lack of legal experience on your CV. Recruiters are keen to hear about the skills you have picked up elsewhere. 'Law firms like variety,' explains Elizabeth Cope, head of graduate recruitment at Freshfields Bruckhaus Deringer.

Use confident language to describe your part-time or holiday experience of retail or bar jobs. Make sure you mention any promotions. It tells the recruiter that, out of hundreds of cashiers in that branch of Sainsbury's, you stood out.

- Advised and assisted customers, resolved customer complaints and handled unexpected situations
- Developed key skills for a career in law: understanding of how large businesses operate, dealing with conflict, working under pressure and negotiating with clients

Separating your experience into different categories, such as legal, commercial and voluntary, makes it easier for the reader. Elizabeth warns against using subheads such as 'Relevant work experience'; it suggests that you think the rest of your CV is irrelevant.

Voluntary and pro bono experience

October 2013–present Elected president of the Birmingham University Law Society

- Chair monthly committee meetings, liaise with the Students' Union and organise social events for 200 society members
- Raised £1,000 of sponsorship for new initiative: the Client Interviewing Competition 2014
- Arranged and introduced speaker – Maura McGowen QC, Bar Council chair at Annual Law Society Dinner 2013

Be consistent with the way you present information. On the first page academic subjects are all in initial upper case, the job titles/position/placement are all italicised and in lower case, and dates are all on the left-hand side.

October 2013–present Student manager, university legal advice clinic

- Set up a legal aid weekly drop-in clinic (run through the welfare office on campus) for students experiencing problems with rental lease or employment rights
- Persuaded two local law firms to supply three qualified solicitors on voluntary basis
- Established a rota of law students to support the solicitors
- Wrote marketing material to increase clinic users from 10 students to 30 students in first month

Include any personal impact you had in a role or position, such as improving productivity, introducing a new process or, in this case, improving your team's success – and quantify your impact where possible. If you proposed a new idea, explain briefly what it was and whether it was implemented. As Elizabeth pointed out, 'took team from 14th to 4th rank at national university league level' shows the personal impact this person has had on the team as captain. Graduate recruiters are unlikely to be interested in positions of responsibility from your school days, so don't include these.

Further positions of responsibility and interests

September 2013–present Captain of the university korfbal team

- Organise fixtures, practices and teambuilding events for 20 squad members
- Took team from 14th to 4th rank at national university league level and won bronze in National Korfbal Championships 2014

Try not to lose momentum towards the end of the CV. The 'interests' section helps the recruiter build up a picture of what makes you tick. You could pull out various tasks here but think about what lawyers do: they pitch for new work and have to meet regular deadlines, under pressure.

November 2012–February 2014 Features editor, Redbrick

- Contributed weekly features to university newspaper, Redbrick
- Pitched new monthly features to editor – including theatre review series

June–August 2011 Au pair, Neuilly-sur-Seine, Paris

- Working entirely in French, developed diplomacy and organisational skills when caring for three children
- Learned the importance of flexibility and adapting to new and unexpected situations

If you have a lot of legal experience earlier in your CV, you could break it up by adding in a section here headed 'Seminars/conferences' and include open days, any legal conferences you've attended or diversity events such as 'City law for ethnic minorities' run by TARGETjobs Events.

Language skills

- Fluent French
- Working knowledge of Spanish

You do not necessarily have to include your references. You can say 'References available upon request', or just omit this as it can safely be assumed that you will provide referees' details if you are offered a job.
